

The mutualistic relationship between mycorrhizae and plants is highly evolved. As many as 90 percent of all plant species rely on fungi for nutrients and protection. In return, plants supply the fungi with a vital food source.

Read accessible description

"[the fungus] performs a "wet nurse" function and performs the entire nourishment of the tree from the soil."

Albert Frank