

Ecological pyramids represent quantifiable data in an ecosystem. Numbers show the population size of individual species in a trophic level; biomass, their relative presence; and energy, who eats what and how much.

Read accessible description

"The basic process in trophic dynamics is the transfer of energy from one part of the ecosystem to another."

Raymond Lindeman