called this a “supernormal stimulus,” showing that instinctive animal behavior can be manipulated artificially.

Ducklings imprinting is an example of instinctive behavior that can be manipulated—to make them imprint on humans or even inanimate objects.