many other studies around the world have corroborated her findings: chimps in the Congo have been observed stripping twigs to use in termite mounds; chimps in Gabon have been seen heading into the forest with a five-piece “toolkit” that included a heavy stick for opening bee hives and pieces of bark for scooping up the honey. In Senegal, hunting parties of chimps have been observed traveling with sticks that they chew to a sharp point and use like spears to kill bush babies.

Jane Goodall working, notebook in hand, at Gombe National Park in 2006. The pioneering primatologist continues her lifelong commitment to protect endangered chimpanzees.

“I viewed my fellow man not as a fallen angel, but as a risen ape.”

Desmond Morris

British Zoologist

More alike than different

Ethologists take behaviors studied across several species to formulate generalizations that apply to many species. The idea that animal behavior