

Small glacial lakes such as this one, Lago Verde, in Los Alerces National Park, Argentina, have unique ecosystems shaped by many factors, such as nutrient levels in the water.

“There is no waste in functioning … ecosystems. All organisms, dead or alive, are potential sources of food for other organisms.”

G. Tyler Miller

Science writer