

Boneworms are deep-sea creatures that feed on the remains of animals such as whales. They grow “roots” to break down the bones, thereby recycling nutrients from the dead material.