

A phytotron built in 1968 in North Carolina, US, has more than 70 growth chambers, four greenhouses, and a controlled-environment facility for studying plant diseases and insects.

“One of the distinctive and fascinating features of ecological systems is their extraordinary complexity.”

Michel Loreau