over time have become separated by barriers such as new oceans or mountain ranges. Today, as human-made changes to climate and the environment gather pace—creating new barriers—this understanding has taken on a new and vital importance.

Tapirs evolved in North America at least 50 million years ago. They spread to and now live in Central and South America, as well as southeast Asia, but died out in North America.