

Nuclear power stations produce plentiful “clean” energy, but also toxic waste. James Lovelock believed that Earth could absorb and overcome the waste’s radioactive effects.