

The leaves of some oak species turn red shortly before they fall in fall. Comparing the date on which this occurs from year to year can provide evidence for climate change.