

Toluca was once a picturesque old town to the west of Mexico City. Now a city of more than 800,000 people, it is gradually merging into the sprawl of Mexico City—at a high ecological cost.