

New kinds of rice are being developed through genetic modification. This may improve the nutritional value of the crop or its resistance to disease.