

Fender’s blue butterfly was not seen after the 1930s and was deemed extinct until it was rediscovered in 1989. It is endangered, but small populations live in northwest Oregon.

Counting grizzlies

In 1975, grizzly bear numbers were shrinking in Yellowstone National Park. Only an estimated 136 of the bears were left, and this isolated population was considered to be endangered. As part of his doctoral research, Mark L.