

The island foxes of the Channel Islands, off California, numbered fewer than 200 in the late 1990s. By 2015, there were more than 5,000, but on one island, a subpopulation is still at risk.