Populations of two species, one a predator and the other its prey, interact.

The prey has access to food, and its population growth is exponential.

When prey animals meet a predator, they are eaten.

Eating prey results in more predators.

More predators result in less prey, reducing the number of predators.

BACK TO ARTICLE