

A graph illustrates how predator and prey populations rise and fall in regular cycles over time.

The size of the changes varies in degree, but the overall pattern remains broadly similar, with prey numbers increasing first, followed by a rise in predator numbers, then both declining before the cycle repeats.

BACK TO ARTICLE