

Four elements of ethological experimentation.

When studying animal behaviour, scientists consider these four elements.

Causation: What triggered the behaviour in the first place?

Development: What stage is the animal in its life cycle, and does the behaviour change as the animal develops?

Function: How does the behaviour increase the animal’s chance of survival or reproductive