1980. Robert Paine coins the term “trophic cascade” after his field experiments show the effect on an ecosystem when a keystone species is removed.

2000. Scientists at the Biodiversity and Ecosystem Function conference in Paris examine how the loss of species impacts ecosystems.

2015. A study of grassland plants suggests that biodiversity increases an ecosystem’s resistance during and resilience after climate events.

BACK TO ARTICLE