
In every region, plants grow and develop through a series of successions.
At each stage, they become bigger, more complex, and interconnected.
Eventually the vegetation takes on the most complicated interconnected form the climate will allow.
Once a community reaches this "climax," vegetation stops changing.