

Fossil fuels burned by industry emit sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide into the air.

These gases react with water in the lower atmosphere to produce sulphuric acid and nitric acid.

The acids fall as rain into lakes and rivers, affecting the pH balance of the water.

Plants and animals cannot live in the acidic water and die off.

BACK TO ARTICLE