Black and blue moods

If a chameleon heats up, or moves into brighter sunlight, it may change color. Changes in mood can also have an effect on its color, such as if it is suddenly frightened. An angry chameleon may even turn black. These color changes often make the chameleon very difficult to see.

Reptile "hide-and-seek" can be a matter of life and death.

Leaflike lizard
Not all reptiles use just their color or markings to blend in. Some, like this leaf-tailed gecko, also have body parts that are shaped like objects in their natural home.