

Safety in the sea

Female turtles make nests in the sand – using their back flippers – where they will lay very large groups (clutches) of eggs. Once hatched, the young turtles make their way directly to the sea. Here, they will be less at risk from attack.

Eggs are laid on land so that the babies can get oxygen from the air.