Reconstruction Committee which was to consider various plans for the reconstruction of the economy.[12]

(ii) Consultative Committee of Economists: A consultative committee of economists under the chairmanship of Ramaswamy Mudaliar was set up in 1941 as a 'think tank' to advise the four Post-War Reconstruction Committees for executing, national plan for the country.

Though the committee suggested many plans for the different areas of the economy but they had negligible practical significance and had all the academic biases of the committee.

(iii) Planning and Development Department: After all possible delays, it was in 1944 that the Government created a Planning and Development Department under a separate member of the Viceroy's Executive Council for organising planning work in the country and co-ordinating it. Ardeshir Dalal (the controller of the Bombay Plan) was appointed as one of its acting members. More than 20 panels of experts were set up. The central departments and the Governments of Provinces and Indian States were invited to prepare detailed plans for industrialisation.[12] This Department was abolished in 1946.

(iv) Advisory Planning Board: In October 1946, the Government of India appointed a committee called the 'Advisory Planning Board'[13] to review the planning that had already been done by the British Government, the work of the National Planning Committee, and other plans and proposals for planning and to make recommendations regarding the future machinery of planning and also in regard to objectives and priorities. The Board strongly recommended the creation of "a single, compact authoritative organisation .... responsible directly to the Cabinet ... which should devote its attention continuously to the whole field of development."[14] This was an emphatic advice for the creation of a National Planning Commission, similar to the FICCI's view of 1934, which will have autonomy and authoritative say on the process of development planning, working in tandem with the Union cabinet and influencing the developmental decisions of the
