institutions, land reforms, promoting inter-caste marriages, etc. do not fall under the purview of the Planning Commission.

(v) Self-reliance: During the 1930s and 1940s, there was an ardent desire among the nationalists, capitalists and the NPC for making the economy self-reliant in every field of the economic sphere. Self-reliance was defined not as autarchy but as an effort to strike against a subordinate position in the world economy. As Jawaharlal Nehru asserted: self-reliance, "does not exclude international trade, which should be encouraged but with a view to avoid economic imperialism."[37] India still strives for self-reliance in every field of economy as well as serving the realities of higher interdependence in the globalising world post-World Trade Organisation (WTO).

(vi) Modernisation: Modernising the traditional economy was set as a foremost objective of the planning. Specially, the agriculture sector of the economy needed an immediate inclusion of modern methods and techniques of farming dairying, etc. Similarly, in education too, India needs to go for inclusion of modern education system.

India did not miss the chance of accepting the importance of modern science and technology. As the economy had selected industry as its prime moving force (PMF), it was essential to adopt the changing dimensions of science and technology.

The major objectives of planning in India are not only broad but open-ended. That is why it hardly needs any change and modification in them with the changing times. It means, after the completion of one plan the objectives for the new plan are automatically set. Coming to the composition of the objectives, we may confidently conclude that all the aspirations of the Preamble,[38] the Directive Principles of the State Policy,[39] the Fundamental Duties and the Fundamental Rights have got their due place and weightage. All the aspirations of the nationalists and the freedom fighters look resonating in the very soul of the Indian planning system.

The objective of planning in India was so broad a term that gradually it encompassed the entire sphere of administration excluding only defence and foreign affairs. The objectives of planning tremendously evolved and got cemented together once the functions of the Planning Commission were
