and services were part of the market mechanism i.e. being produced and supplied by the private sector. It meant that almost everything the people required was supplied by the private enterprises via the market which was ultimately an undimensional movement of money and wealth (from the mass of people to the few who controlled the production and supply chain) and the masses were going through the process of pauperisation every day, thereby weakening their purchasing power. In the end, it affected overall demand and culminated in the Great Depression.

As a follow up to the Keynesian advices, many trendsetting economic policies were initiated throughout the capitalist economies. One very important initiative which came out was the government's active role in the economy. The governments started producing and supplying some basic goods and services which are known as 'public goods'. These goods basically intended to guarantee minimum level of nutrition to all, healthcare, sanitation, education, social security, etc. The expenditure on the public goods were incurred on the public exchequer even if it required deficit financing. Starting from 1930s upto 1950s, almost 50 per cent of the GDP in the Euro-America was spent by the governments on the public goods which also become popular as the social sector. The essential goods and services which were till date being purchased by the people as 'private goods' were soon made available by the state 'free-of-cost' giving people more spare money to create demand for the goods and services which were part of the market.

The above instance has been cited here to just show the process as to how capitalism redefined itself by including some useful traits of the non-market economy i.e. the state economy. The mixed economy arrived in this way and the classical capitalistic economy was challenged by it.

On the margins of the developments given above, it is interesting to note the developments in the State Economies of the time. It was Prof. Oscar Lange (1904–65), the Polish philosopher, who in 1950s suggested the same thing for the socialist economy as Keynes had for the capitalist. Prof. Lange praised the state economy for many of its good things but also suggested inclusion of some of the good things of the capitalistic economy[2]. He advised the state economies to adopt 'market socialism' (the term was coined by him). His suggestions were outrightly rejected by the state
