- Due to above-given reasons the stand of the Indian capitalist class has been often seen as supportive to the Imperial Rule.

  But objective analysis of their stand proves it wrong:

- From mid 19th century, Indian capitalists had their independent capital base and did not remain junior partners of foreign capital – which was antagonistic to the foreign capitalism class.
- The Bombay Plan (of a wide cross section of the leaders of Indian capitalist class) vehemently demanded land reform, co-operativisation of production, finance and marketing (like nationallist leaders).
- FICCI (1927) soon got relevance which by 1930s started talking of ‘unequal exchanges’ – the INC saw it as a favour against the fighting imperialist economic hegemony.
- By 1928, FICCI had clearly indicated of entering politics with ‘nationalistic stand’ – a general approach of strengthening the hands of those who were for freedom of the country.
- They were opposed to Civil Disobedience, reasons being – a prolonged movement could unleash forces which may become revolutionary in a social sense (threatening capitalists) and a ‘disregard for authority’ could hamper the future government after getting Swaraj; hampered day-to-day business threating the very existence of the business class; followed constitutional process but not on the terms of the Britishers (participated in councils, conferences – which did show as if they were with the Imperial powers.
- By 1935, FICCI announced that without the INC approval or participation it would not get involved with the Imperial rule at any level – bycotted First Round Table Conference as it was not having Gandhi and the INC.
- By 1937, FICCI has started pressurising the British government to come out with a goal of ‘self-rule’ and informed them that if it was not the outcome, the Congress will go for ‘direct action’ which meant ‘non-violent mass civil-disobedience’.