Soviet Bloc countries to Britain and the USA that a proper study and discussion started on the very nature and purpose of planning in the command economies. Many of these economists went back to their countries of origin after the Second World War to serve and in some measure, suffer the revolution there.[13] It was their articulate and contemporary economic thinking which formed the basis for the idea of mixed economy in the post-War world. One among them was Oskar Lange, the famous Polish economist who after returning home to serve as the Chairman of the Polish State Economic Council (as India has the Planning Commission) suggested and coined the concept of 'market socialism' in the 1950s. His ideas of market socialism were cancelled by not only Poland but also by the other state economies of the time.[14]

The peak of this type of planning was reached in China after the Cultural Revolution (1966–69) which led to an economic slowdown in the country which had adopted a Soviet-style central planning system after 1949. Under Deng Xiaoping (1977–97), China decentralised a great deal of economic power with its announcement of the "open door policy" in 1985 to save the economy. The Chinese open door policy was an initiative in the direction of the 'market socialism' under the communist political design itself (a popular student demand for political reform in favour of democracy was ruthlessly repressed in Tiananmen square in 1989). Similarly, the Soviet Union under the leadership of Mikhail Gorbachev began a process of political and economic reforms, called prestroika (i.e. restructuring) and glasnost (i.e openness) in 1985 to save the failed economic experiments in the state economy. Other East European economies followed, similar economic reforms 1989 onwards. Thus, the whole world of the state economies had moved towards market economy by the late 1980s. Since then none of the countries have followed imperative planning.

2. Indicative Planning

In the following two decades after the Soviet planning commenced, the idea of planning got attention from the democratic world. A time came when some such economies started national planning. As they were neither the state economies nor Communist/Socialist political systems, the nature of
