settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of peace.

- Develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace.
- Achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.
- Be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.[3]

Though the purposes of the UN are again quite novel but the very purpose of Article 1(1) gets defeated with Article 2(7) of the Charter debarring the UN from interfering in the cases of strife falling under the domestic jurisdiction of the states. This handicaps the UN from preventing or removing the threats to peace, which may be an internal affair but has a potential to become a threat to peace internationally.

Article 2, in pursuance of the purposes stated in Article 1, prescribes certain principles for their realization. These principles are:

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its members.
2. All members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfill in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.
3. All members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered.
4. All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent
