fast integrating under one universal umbrella. The term ‘globalization’ encompasses various aspects including expanded international trade, telecommunications, monetary coordination, multinational corporations, cultural exchanges of new types and scales, migration and refugee flows, and relations between the world’s rich and poor countries.[3]