education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction".[6]

Initially, the United Nations Human Rights Programme organizationally started as a small division at the United Nations Headquarters in the 1940s. The Division later moved to Geneva and was upgraded as the Centre for Human Rights in the 1980s. At the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, the international community decided to establish a more robust human rights mandate with stronger institutional support. Accordingly, the member states of the United Nations created the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) by a General Assembly Resolution in 1993.

All the principal organs of the United Nations are involved in the protection of human rights. Article 13 enshrines the responsibility of the General Assembly to: "The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of: a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification; b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion".

The Economic and Social Council has been charged with the responsibilities, which are directly linked to the protection and upliftment of the human rights. Under Articles 62/1 and 62/2 the Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly to the members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned. It may also make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Under Article 68, the Council shall set up commissions in economic