religious insurgents. Fourth, the generals may have been following a pattern developed in precolonial times in which kings had relocated the capital at particular historical moments. A final factor was that fortunetellers had encouraged the key members of the junta to move the capital. This somewhat bizarre theory has strong support. On multiple occasions in modern Myanmar history fortunetellers have impacted governmental policy. Whatever the actual reason this type of move for a country with immense socioeconomic problems was totally irrational.