Tabinshweti (1512–1550). He was the Toungoo dynasty king who unified Burma during his reign from 1531 to 1550. Tabinshweti led military campaigns against the kingdom of Pegu in 1535 and Martaban and Moulmein in 1541 that ended with Toungoo dominating Lower Burma. Following the unification of Burma, Tabinshweti attempted two unsuccessful campaigns against Tavoy and Ayutthaya, the Siamese capital, in 1548, only to be forced to return to Pegu. Humiliated by the crushing defeats Tabinshweti retreated from public life before being assassinated by a close Mon advisor Smim Sawhtut in 1550, who proclaimed himself king. Tabinshweti's brother-in-law Bayinnaung crushed the Mon revolt and carried on Tabinshweti's work of unifying Burma.

Than Shwe (1933–). He was a general who was a political leader and chairman of the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) from 1992 to 2011. Shwe resigned his position as chairman of the SPDC in favor of his handpicked successor, Thein Sein. Little is known about his childhood. He was born on February 2, 1933, in Minzo in the Mandalay division. He attended Government High School in Kyaukse. Following high school, Than enlisted in the Burmese Army and was accepted into the Army Officer Training School.

Thibaw Min (1858–1916). Also known as Maung Pu. He was the last king of the Konbaung dynasty, whose reign (1878–1885) ended with the British annexing Upper Burma. The British deposed Thibaw and Upper Burma was incorporated in British India. A younger son of King Mindon Thibaw succeeded his father following a bloody succession massacre orchestrated by his wife, Supayalat. Faced with the prospect of mounting British pressure Thibaw entered into diplomatic negotiations with the French, culminating with a commercial treaty signed in Paris in 1885. A proclamation issued by Thibaw served as a pretext to invade Mandalay and force the unconditional surrender of Thibaw.
