of Modern Burma covers the Burma from the late colonial stage through the Saffron Revolution of 2007. This very organized and fluid work is a must read for anyone interested in developments in modern Burma.

Mary Callahan's Making Enemies: War and State Building in Burma is a significant contribution in the field of military influence in Burmese politics and development. Josef Silverstein's Military Rule and the Politics of Stagnation is an additional work of serious scholarship on civil-military relations in Myanmar. Callahan and Silverstein are the definitive experts on the dominating role of the military in Burmese society. Monique Skidmore's Karaoke Fascism is a fascinating look at the oppression of military rule in Burma.

Martin Smith in Burma: Insurgency and the Politics of Ethnicity best explains the complicated role of minorities in Burmese society. Additionally Bertil Linter's works on ethnic politics specifically the problems with the Shan minority are chronicled in Contemporary Southeast Asia. Carolyn Wakeman and San San Tin's No Time for Dreams Living in Burma Under Military Rule is one of the newest additions to of dissident writers who have fled Burma in recent years. The issues of human rights violations and mistreatment of minority populations are discussed in the numerous reports from Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, Burma. Furthermore a plethora of advocacy groups devoted to furthering the cause of Burmese democracy have formed over the past two decades. The most noteworthy organizations include the U.S. Campaign for Burma, Burma Watch, Burma Campaign UK, and the Free Burma Rangers.

Travel works on Burma are some of the most helpful books in order to gain a general understanding of life in modern Burma. Emma Larkin's masterfully written Finding George Orwell in Burma follows the writer's footsteps from his time as a police officer in colonial Burma. Larkin brings to life the common Burmese peasant and explains the relationship between citizen and state under the harsh conditions of authoritarianism. The Myanmar (Burma) travel guide from the Lonely Planet series written by Robert Reid and Michael Grosberg does a through job with geography and travel highlights for the potential visitor to the region.

Books on or about Nobel Prize–winning pro-democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi are abundant. Her earlier work Freedom from Fear is a
