chronicles, Mrauk-U would remain a part of Bengal sultans for about 100 years. It is of note that no further sources can confirm the Mrauk-U founding myth. Subsequent Arakanese kings extended their control over the Arakanese littoral to the coastal areas and the islands of Cheduba and Ramree through a combination of force and diplomacy.

Min Saw Mon was succeeded by his brother Min Kahri Ali Khan (r. ca. 1434–1459), who brought the Arakanese littoral under Mrauk-U suzerainty. Ali Khan campaigned against Chittagong, Cukkara, and Ramu during his reign. He entered into a friendship and border treaty with King Naripati of Ava and declared Arakan free from Bengali rule. Ali Khan's son and successor Ba Saw Phru Kalima Shah (r. ca. 1459–1482) defeated Sultan Barbak Shaw of Bengal and occupied Chittagong in 1459. Kalima Shah was assassinated in 1482 and Mrauk-U was plunged into chaos for a short period of time before Dawlya Mathu Shah (r. ca. 1482–1492) ascended the throne. Dawlya Mathu Shah extended Mrauk-U's control to the east and west. Little is known about the 50-year period following the reign of Dawlya Mathu Shah. What is known is that a series of succession struggles weakened Mrauk-U kingdom to the extent that they lost control over the Arakanese littoral until the reign of Min Bin Zabuk Shah (r. ca. 1531–1553).

Min Bin's reign is considered to be most important in Arakanese history as it was during his reign that Arakan defeated Burmese king Tabinshweti's invasion, aided by Portuguese mercenaries and Mon levies, in 1546–1547. Min Bin took advantage of the Mughals' invasion of the sultanate of Gaur to occupy east Bengal with a combined fleet and army movement that ended with the capture of Chittagong. Min Bin is also credited with creating a naval fleet that dominated the Bay of Bengal and the Gulf of Martaban. This allowed the Mrauk-U dynasty to control the entire coast line of the Dacca and the Sundarbans to Yankon and Moulmein, a distance of 1,000 miles. Ports along the coast received Arab, Danish, Dutch, and Portuguese traders during this period. Controlling the economies of the Kaladan and Lemro valleys led to growing international trade that enabled Mrauk-U to become prosperous.

The reigns of Min Phalaung Sikendar Shah (r. ca. 1571–1593), his son Min Rajagri Salim Shah I (r. ca. 1593–1612), and his grandson Min Khamuang Hussain Shah (r. ca. 1612–1622) strengthened the wealth and
