Straus and Giroux, 2021), chap. 3; and Joseph Henrich, The Weirdest People in the World (New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2020), chap. 3. A classic study of how religious stories and rituals produce large-scale cooperation is Donald Tuzin's study of Ilahita. While most of its neighbouring communities in New Guinea numbered a few hundred people, the complex religious beliefs and practices of Ilahita succeeded in uniting thirty-nine clans numbering about twenty-five hundred people altogether. See Donald Tuzin, Social Complexity in the Making: A Case Study Among the Arapesh of New Guinea (London: Routledge, 2001); Donald Tuzin, The Ilahita Arapesh: Dimensions of Unity (Oakland: University of California Press, 2022).
