* Paradoxically, while psychological studies of subjective well-being rely on people's ability to diagnose their happiness correctly, the basic raison d'être of psychotherapy is that people don't really know themselves and that they sometimes need professional help to free themselves of self-destructive behaviours.