

4. To wipe everything, scroll to the bottom and choose Hide all.

Hidden titles disappear from recommendations and from Continue Watching, so you lose your place. And "Hide all" is permanent – no undo. Your homepage will go generic for about a week while the algorithm rebuilds. Kids profiles can't have activity hidden at all.

6) Browse the library by genre code, not algorithm

Netflix organises its catalogue internally with numeric category IDs – thousands of them. Append one to a URL and you get a full browsable page of that micro-genre.

Keep this in mind, these codes do not unlock a hidden catalogue, bypass regional licensing, or defeat parental controls. It just makes the library browsable instead of being algorithmically curated.

How to do it:

1. In a browser, go to `netflix.com/browse/genre/` followed by a code – for example `8711` for horror or `9875` for true crime.
2. Bookmark the ones you use. Sites like What's on Netflix maintain large indexes of working codes.
3. Codes don't work inside the TV or mobile apps. To use them on a TV, open the code in a browser, add titles to My List, then open My List on your TV.

7) Give subtitles an opaque background

Netflix's default subtitle style is white text with a soft drop shadow, which vanishes the moment a scene goes bright. If you're working through Korean, Japanese or Spanish-language titles, this is the difference between a habit and a chore. The fix is a full appearance editor most people never open.

How to do it:

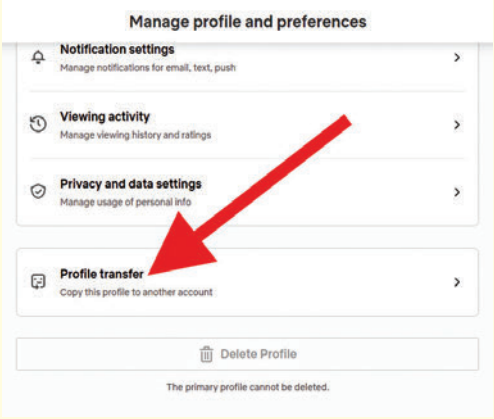

1. Go to netflix.com → Account → Profiles → your profile → Subtitle appearance.
2. Set Text style to a plain typeface and bump the size up one notch.
3. Under Background, choose black and set opacity to solid rather than transparent. This is the change that matters.
4. Save. The style syncs to every compatible device on that profile.

8) Transfer a profile instead of losing it

If someone is moving off your account – it could be a sibling shifting cities, a flatmate moving out – they don't have to start from scratch. Profile Transfer moves a profile to its own new subscription from the previous shared one, carrying the original viewing history, recommendations, My List and even your saved game data with it.

How to do it:

1. From the profile being moved, go to netflix.com → Account → that profile → Transfer profile.
2. Follow the prompts to create the new account and add the new payment method.
3. Give it a few minutes to complete properly before signing in on your brand new account.

Remember that Kids profiles in Netflix cannot be transferred. If the profile has its own email address attached, Netflix may even refuse until that's removed – which changes how that person can actually sign in to their Netflix account, so don't be extremely casual with the transfer process.
