

The difference between the majority and minorities emerged in response to a question on whether or not the military should be involved in politics. Given the history of the military in conflict, its predominant Bamar/Buddhist composition and association with many of the discriminatory perceptions by minorities, it is not surprising that only a third of minorities reported support for its involvement. Figure 13.12 shows that this is considerably lower than the majority of Bamar/Buddhists, who support the military being involved in politics.
