from discussions of religious conflict in Myanmar, yet the research team had heard strong indications that conditions there were tense between religious groups. The delta was also the site of serious conflict during the 1930s (Burma Government 1939a; Brown 2013).

7 M.MAS colleague Phyu Phyu Thi and the author conducted all interviews. Each interview opened with an informed consent process, after which the interview was audio recorded. Selected sections of these audio recordings were then translated and transcribed after all the interviews had been completed and reviewed.

8 In another setting, this research may have been called an oral history. "Listening project" was chosen as the framing because the Phnom Penh based Center for Peace and Conflict Studies (CPCS) has conducted a number of insightful listening projects in Myanmar and the methodology, or at least the name, is familiar for many in Myanmar civil society. CPCS, in turn, has based their approach on methodology developed by Collaborative Development Action/Boston. See, <http://www.centrepeaceconflictstudies.org/> and <http://cdacollaborative.org/>. M.MAS was inspired by the work of these groups but would not arrogate complete fidelity to their approach.

9 For a further discussion of this sense of contradiction, see Schissler, Walton and Phyu Phyu Thi (2015, pp. 15–18).

10 Woman, 38, Buddhist, Myanmar, Lashio, March 2015.

11 The etymology of 'kalar' is contested and the meaning controversial, but there is no controversy in saying that 'kalar' signifies 'foreigner', and usually foreigner of South Asian descent. For a comprehensive summary of these debates, see Egreteau (2011, pp. 47–48).

12 Woman, 38, Buddhist, Myanmar, Lashio, March 2015.

13 Man, 36, Buddhist, Chinese/Myanmar, Mawlamyine, March 2015.

14 The campaign took on the name Pan Zagar (flower speech) following initial demonstrations during March 2014 in which activists placed flowers in their mouths to signify their anti-hate speech message, as in 'speak flower speech (not hate speech)'.

15 For reflections on the launch of this campaign and the context in Myanmar at the time, see Schissler (2014).

16 The Pan Zagar Facebook page currently has 75,325 followers. See <http://www.facebook.com/panzagar>. Accessed 1 December 2015.

17 On this echo chamber and the potential for puncturing it, see Schissler (2015).

18 The campaign members were able to use Facebook's complaints procedure to effect the removal of the imposter account, which was in violation of the company's user policies that prohibit identity theft.

19 The posts were selected from a collection maintained by an underground hate-speech monitoring network of youth activists in Myanmar. The group