
Barrel-securing pin
India-Pattern musket, 1797
This version of the Brown Bess musket, a muzzle-loading flintlock smoothbore, was adopted by the British army in the 1790s. It had an effective range of about 90m (300ft), and was last used in the Indian Mutiny of 1857.
"TROTTER" KNAPSACK CLOSED ABOVE AND OPEN BELOW
Woollen blanket unrolled to keep soldier warm on march or in camp
Food bag
This linen bag contained bread, meat, rice, and biscuits, all supplied by the commissary.
"Trotter" knapsack
Made of wood and canvas, this envelope knapsack (or "Trotter") was introduced in 1805 for light infantry. By 1812 it was being used throughout the British army.
Telescope
Striker steel
Flannel
Flashpan and touch-hole
Cut-throat razor
Jaws for holding flint
Clothes brush
Rear sling swivel
Rustproof brass buckle
Sewing kit
Brush for applying pipe clay
Leather sling
Soap in soap dish
Box containing flint, striker, and tinder for starting fire
Beneath tinder box: cleaning equipment, including brick dust for metalwork, pipe clay for white leather, and blackball for shoes and black leather
Leather pouch for razor and shaving brush
Fishing kit
Diary
Waterproofed canvas
Wooden frame
Equipment for gun maintenance, including ramrod attachments for cleaning barrel