

Ironwood was chosen for its hardness, the better to inflict maximum damage

Knobkerrrie was about 1m (3ft) in length

Apron
This Zulu's warrior's umutsha (apron or loincloth) was made of cowhide and covered his front and back. This example features a large goat-fur decoration.

Knobkerrie
The knobkerrie (left) was a stick with a round knob at the end, about 10cm (4in) or so in diameter, all intricately carved from a single piece of wood. Zulu craftsmen used the hardest possible woods for the weapon. The best was ironwood, a dark and heavy wood, which produced an elegant, vicious weapon for clubbing enemy tribesmen.

Penis cover
Worn for ceremonial purposes as well as in battle for obvious protection, the penis cover was given to all young warriors after circumcision.
