
Equipment belt
The stormtrooper's belt housed an assortment of kit including bread bag, water bottle, six ammunition pouches, bayonet, and axe. Each item was clipped to the belt independently to facilitate rapid access.
Ammunition pouches
Fastening allows items to be slid along belt
Bayonet in scabbard
Axe within leather case
Belt was smooth on the inside and rough on the outside
Wooden handle
Casing houses metal bearings
Stick grenade
The stick grenade or Stielhandgranate was the primary grenade of the German army during late World War I and World War II. It was so called because of its long, usually wooden, handle.
Bread bag
Water bottle
Wooden throwing handle
FIVE-ROUND AMMUNITION CLIP
SUPPLEMENTARY 25-ROUND MAGAZINE
Trousers
The most distinctive feature of these trousers is the leather knee patches. These were common for machine gunners, especially, and the preferred fashion for many of Germany's assault troops in 1918.
Mauser carbine
The Mauser KAR 98AZ carbine was preferred by assault troops over the standard Mauser infantry rifle as it was shorter and more manageable when attacking Allied trenches. The Mauser bolt and the pointed "Spitzer" bullets meant that it was a very accurate rifle with a long range – confirmed at 790m (2,600ft).
Knee patches
Graduated rear sight
Cap for protecting muzzle
Fore stock cap
Roll of puttees
Puttees, narrow strips of cloth wound tightly and spirally around the leg, served as both support and protection.
Fighting knife
This crank handle trench fighting knife was made by Demag. The handle is painted original field grey. The knife was housed in a black scabbard, not shown. Fixed to the stormtrooper's Mauser rifle, it acted as an alternative bayonet.
Locking release button
Manufacturer's mark