

Bandolier
Worn across the chest to supplement ammunition in the cartridge belt, this would have contained six en-bloc (single unit) clips, each containing eight rounds of 30.06 ammunition.

MK II GRENADE

K-RATIONS

D-RATIONS

Rations
K-rations were eaten three times a day, with different breakfast, dinner, and supper packs. They contained non-perishable foods such as dry biscuits, tinned ham and egg, sugar, fruit juice and coffee, as well as gum and cigarettes. Designed as an emergency ration, the food provided too few calories for long-term use by fighting men and, as an unchanging diet, proved monotonous. The D-ration was a highly concentrated, vitamized oatmeal and chocolate energy bar.

MESS PAN

STANDARD ISSUE CUTLERY

HEXAMINE

WOOD ALCOHOL

WATERPROOF MATCH CONTAINER

Cooking equipment
Soldiers were issued with a standard mess pan and cutlery. They cooked with wood alcohol, which burned with a hot flame, or with solid fuel tablets of hexamine, which could burn without kindling.