Drainage holes at base of pockets

M14 magazine pouch

M1943 jungle first-aid kit

Belt of cotton webbing with friction buckle

M14 magazine pouch giving average of 80 rounds

M19 canteen carrier insulated with wool

M61 webbing
Webbing was worn like a jacket. Straps looped over the shoulders and equipment hung around the waist. The reverse of the webbing had more snaps for attaching rifle ammunition pouches.

M6 scabbard

> "BEING READY IS NOT WHAT MATTERS. WHAT MATTERS IS WINNING AFTER YOU GET THERE."
>
> LIEUTENANT GENERAL V.H. KRULAK, USMC, TO A MARINE UNIT LEAVING FOR VIETNAM, APRIL 1965

Trousers tropical WR Class II
These standard issue camouflage trousers were worn by Marines and also the army. The ankles had drawstrings and were worn rolled up on the boot to prevent saturation with water.

Pockets held rations and personal effects

Dogtag threaded to boot for ease of identification

Tropical combat boots
The most common of all boots issued to Marines, they were made of leather and canvas with the hard rubber sole directly moulded on as stitching tended to rot in the tropical climate. From 1967 Panama sole boots were issued with an embedded steel plate to protect against punji sticks – booby traps of sharp stakes.

Drainage eyelet

Deep tread pattern retained mud

Rubber sole