
Axe hooked over enemy's shield to pull it away
SKEG AXE
"Beard" of blade kept blunt so as not to lodge in the rival's shield
Many Vikings named their weapons
Sax
Primarily a tool, but also used as a weapon, it was worn across the front of the waist. The larger version was called a langsax or "long knife".
Antler handle
Leather loops for hanging the sax from the belt
Leather sheath with a bronze edging
Design shows Ormagundr, the Great Worm, often mistaken for a dragon
Sealskin
Double-edged steel blade with rounded tip used for slashing rather than stabbing
Round Shields
These were made from linden wood planks riveted together and edged with rawhide, then decorated with hand-painted designs.
