

Current Daily Activity Status

The current daily status relates to the activity status of a person during each day of the reference period of seven days preceding the date of survey. It sees each day into two halves or in full and record activity status for each half separately. It is more suitable for unorganised sector where the availability of work/employment vary each day. Even in a day the work may be available only for half a day. Consider agricultural sector, the work of irrigating the field depends on the availability of electricity. It may be for half a day.

- Each day of the reference week is looked upon as consisting of either two 'half days' or a 'full day' for assigning the activity status.
- A person is considered 'working' (employed) for the entire day if
