

Most zoonoses (diseases that pass from animals to humans) are caused by viruses or bacteria, which live in host (reservoir) animals. They may be transferred to humans via direct contact or consumption, or through vector organisms, such as ticks or mosquitoes.

Read accessible description

See also: Endangered habitats • Overpopulation • Deforestation • Amphibian viruses • Nature's contributions to people