

Muskoxen are Arctic herd animals whose numbers were severely depleted in the 19th century by hunting. They now live on reserves in Alaska, Norway, and Siberia.

See also: Human activity and biodiversity • Biodiversity hotspots • Biomes • Deforestation • Environmental ethics