

George Perkins Marsh in an engraving from 1882. As well as being an environmentalist, the Vermont native was also a skilled linguist, lawyer, congressman, and diplomat.

See also: Global warming • A plastic wasteland • Humankind’s dominance over nature • Environmental ethics