out to the Global South to widen stakeholders. This involves taking steps to have a bigger global footprint, including diplomatically, economically, and perhaps even militarily. In this way, India can advance its own national interests at international forums while positioning itself increasingly as a leading power.